Taser inquiry urged

▶ Hog-tie restraint still being used despite 2002 prohibition: Report ▶ Many cases involve people with pre-existing illnesses, mental health problems

SEAN MCKIBBON
@METRONEWS.CA

Canada needs a national inquiry into police use of Tasers, said an Ottawa defence lawyer following an RCMP watchdog report warning police not to "hog-tie" and Taser people.

A report by the Commission for Public Complaints Against the RCMP found hog-tie restraints used in 40 per cent of cases in which someone died after being Tasered.

The hog-tie involves binding both the hands and feet behind a person, then linking them with rope or other such restraint.

"There needs to be an independent public inquiry," said Ottawa defence lawyer Norm Boxall. The Criminal Lawyers' Association, of which Boxall is a member, called for a review for the use of Tasers in 2007. Boxall said yesterday there should be national criteria for police training and use of the stun guns.

The report, obtained by the Canadian Press through the Access to Information Act, looked at 10 deaths between 2003 and 2008. The report urges better training on identifying and dealing with the mentally ill and those with drug and alcohol problems.

"There's been too many instances where Tasers have been used and tragic consequences have followed."
DEFENCE LAWYER NORM BOXALL

The commission also found the RCMP's In-Custody Death form — intended to capture information about the circumstances of a fatality — was not completed in eight of the 10 cases.

A separate Mountie Taser use form was filled out in seven cases, but many were completed "a significant time after the incident."

In addition, the information on file was often too limited to determine what officers did to try to de-escalate confrontations. WITH FILES FROM THE CANADIAN PRESS

Wet winter weather isn't going anywhere

Ottawa is "fully into the winter-like weather," said an Environment Canada warning preparedness meteorologist yesterday. Drivers commuting to work today should continue to exercise caution as the multi-phase storm system, which includes freezing rain, rain and snow later today, continues. "It could potentially make things a little treacherous," said Geoff Coulson. "It's one of the more significant storm systems. After a period of quiet weather, we're looking at more active weather ... with colder-than-normal temperatures."

▶ Members of the Ottawa Regional Youth Choir perform alongside musicians of the National Arts Centre Orchestra during the Christmas FanFair concert yesterday.

Hundreds of music lovers crowded the foyer of the NAC yesterday to revel in Christmas cheer, National Arts Centre Orchestra-style.

Young volunteers collected donations for the Ottawa Food Bank and the Snowsuit Fund as members of the NACO, the Ottawa Regional Youth Choir and Junior Kidsingers performed both seasonal and family favourites.

Held since 1989, the concert is a fundraiser for the city's most-needed charities, said Ottawa Food Bank executive director Peter Tilley.

"This is the best way to give: concretely, of course, by giving money and time, but more importantly, giving with our hearts and caring for one another."
CHRISTMAS FANFAIR ORGANIZER MARJOLAINE FOURNIER

"For many of us in the orchestra, playing the Fanfair concert has become the highlight of our holiday season," said Christmas FanFair organizer Marjolaine Fournier. "The kind and generous spirit shown by everyone, the kids, the singing, the music, and the surprises just make the whole day exceptional."

The Ottawa Food Bank provides 43,000 people — 40 per cent of whom are children — with emergency food assistance each month.

Unique take on holiday shopping

Artisans from across Canada converging at Lansdowne Park

JOE LOFARO
OTTAWA@METRONEWS.CA

Christmas shoppers who are tired of spending hours at the mall not knowing what to buy may want to visit the Originals Ottawa Craft show at Lansdowne Park.

Shoppers can browse through thousands of high quality items made by Canadian artisans as well as gourmet specialties.

For those with foodies on their Christmas list, Better than Sex chocolates from Vancouver sell for $33 for three bags.

For a more memorable gift, Practical Art sells handmade steel wine racks in the shapes of grape vines that can hang on the wall or rest on a table.

If you go

The artisan show in the Exhibition Hall runs through Sunday.

- More than 200 artists and designers were carefully selected to participate in the show, providing shoppers with unique gift ideas.
- The show runs from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends.

"The practical aspect is nice and a lot of pieces have a dual function," said Blair Miskie, who also sells steel dragonfly solar lights that can either hang on the wall or light up a garden in the summer.

3,000 expected for cross-country event

The National Capital Commission expects close to 3,000 skiers to hit the trails during Winterlude for the 33rd annual Gatineau Loppet.

The event — among the world's most prestigious cross-country ski competitions — is expected to attract expert and amateur skiers from 20 countries.

With more than 200 kilometres of cross-country skiing trails, executive vice-president of operations at NCC, Jean-François Trépanier, calls Gatineau Park "a worldwide reference for cross-country skiers and outdoor enthusiasts."

The loppet will take place Feb. 18 to 20.

Charity scams hurt the taxman

Charitable donation tax-receipt system open to abuse: CRA docs
Preparation fraud widespread

The Canada Revenue Agency is considering big changes to the way charities issue donation receipts after internal probes found widespread scamming, newly disclosed documents show.

Standard paper receipts now issued by charities are too easily faked, forged or finessed, cheating the federal treasury out of millions in taxes.

So some agency officials are proposing tougher rules requiring charities to electronically track and account for their receipts, to help the taxman flush out fraudsters.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Receipt revamp

The current receipt system is described as a "weakness."

- A spokesman for the agency declined to provide details of any changes being considered.
- One issue facing the agency is that many charities are small and poorly staffed, making an electronic filing regime a daunting prospect, says the internal paper.
- The agency said that 85 tax-preparer cases are currently being investigated, 31 of them involving alleged charity fraud.

Swedes horrified by suicide bombing

No one died except the suspected bomber, but two explosions in Sweden's capital tore at the fabric of this tolerant and open nation — a society that hadn't seen a terrorist attack in more than three decades.

Two people were wounded in central Stockholm on Saturday in what appeared to be the first suicide bombing in the history of Sweden, which has been spared the major terrorist strikes seen in other European countries.

A car exploded in the middle of the seasonal shopping frenzy, shooting flames and causing several smaller blasts as people ran screaming from the scene.

The blast that killed the alleged bomber came moments later further a few blocks away on a busy pedestrian street.

Experts said the alleged bomber probably didn't succeed in detonating all the explosives and could have caused much greater damage. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

10 people wounded in Vancouver gang shooting

An apparent lull in Vancouver's gang violence was shattered early yesterday after a shooting that wounded 10 people and awoke residents to the sounds of gunfire.

Investigators were quick to label the shooting gang-related, but police haven't confirmed whether any of the victims were simply innocent bystanders caught up in the violence.

Vancouver police said shots rang out around 2 a.m. along a busy street that cuts through residential areas in the middle of the city.

When officers arrived, they found victims scattered across several city blocks.

"We're characterizing this as an outrageous display of gang violence," Const. Jana McGuinness said in an interview.

"This was in a public place — really, anyone on the street may have been caught up in this. At this early stage, we still don't know if some of them were innocents."

Six men and three women were in hospital, two of them critical. A 10th victim refused treatment.

At least five people were in custody, although McGuinness said that number could change. She said investigators were waiting to interview the shooting victims.

Richard Bruin, who lives along the street where the shooting took place, said his sleep was interrupted by gun shots. "Rat tat tat tat tat, and then a burst of more gunfire, people screaming," said Bruin. "My neighbour heard the gunshots and ran outside, he saw a couple of people running away."

Bruin said he's used to "constantly" hearing about shootings in the Vancouver area, but not where he lives. "Too close to home," said Bruin. "There's a gang-land problem in Vancouver ... but this neighbourhood, rarely ever has anything happened. This is blowing everybody's minds."

Violence flares

2010 has been a relatively quiet year for gang violence in Vancouver.

- The violence appeared to calm during much the past year, but there have been several incidents in recent months that have police on edge. They include the targeted murder of a gangster at a busy Burnaby, B.C., mall in October.
- Also in October, Vancouver police warned of potential gang violence over the Halloween weekend. There was indeed a shooting that weekend outside a nightclub in Vancouver's trendy Gastown district, injuring four people, although police later said it wasn't linked to gangs.
- Last week, the RCMP issued a news release warning of "an increase in gang tensions and instability" in the region.

Vatican felt 'offended': Latest leaks

Cables reveal behind-the-scenes reaction to Ireland's effort to question high-ranking churchmen

WIKI LEAKS

Newly released U.S. diplomatic cables indicate that the Vatican felt "offended" that Ireland failed to respect Holy See "sovereignty" by asking high-ranking churchmen to answer questions from an Irish government commission probing decades of sex abuse of minors by clergy.

That the Holy See used its diplomatic immunity status as a tiny-city state to try to thwart Ireland's government-led probe has long been known. But the WikiLeaks cables, published by the Guardian newspaper of London on Saturday, contain delicate, diplomatic assessments of the highly charged situation.

The Vatican press office declined to comment on the content of the cables Saturday, but decried the leaks as a matter of "extreme seriousness."

The U.S. ambassador to the Holy See also condemned the leaks and said in a statement that the Vatican and America co-operate in promoting universal values.

According to the deputy to the Irish ambassador to the Holy See, the Irish government gave in to Vatican pressure and allowed the church officials to avoid answering questions from the inquiry panel, according to one of the cables from a U.S. diplomat.

Ambassador Noel Fahey apparently told U.S. diplomat Julieta Valls Noyes that the sex abuse scandal was a tricky one to manage.

"The Vatican believes the Irish government failed to respect and protect Vatican sovereignty during the investigations," reads the cable from Noyes, deputy chief of mission.

Elsewhere in the cable the diplomat, citing a Holy See official, wrote that the inquiry commission's requests "offended many in the Vatican" because they were viewed as "an affront to Vatican sovereignty."

The diplomat also said that "adding insult to injury, Vatican officials also believed some Irish opposition politicians were making political hay with the situation by publicly calling on the government to demand that the Vatican reply."

The Irish government wanted to be seen as co-operating with the investigation because its own education department was implicated in decades of abuse, but politicians were reluctant to insist Vatican officials answer the investigators' questions, the cables indicate.

One cable discloses the behind-the-scenes diplomatic manoeuvres by which Irish politicians tried to persuade the Vatican to co-operate with the probe.

"In the end the Irish government decided not to press the Vatican reply," the U.S. diplomat wrote, citing Fahey's deputy, Helena Keleher.

Saturday's official Vatican press statement said the WikiLeaks cables "reflect the perceptions and opinions of the people who wrote them and cannot be considered as expressions of the Holy See itself." It added that the reports "reliability must, then, be evaluated carefully and with great prudence."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vatican relations

The cables also contain information regarding the Vatican's relations with the Anglican Communion, which includes the Church of England and its affiliates in more than 160 countries.

- One cable reports that Britain's ambassador to the Vatican warned that the pope's invitation to disaffected Anglicans to join the Catholic church had chilled relations between the two churches and risked inciting a violent backlash against British Catholics.
- A November 2009 file from U.S. Embassy at the Vatican quotes British envoy Francis Campbell as saying that "Anglican-Vatican relations were facing their worst crisis in 150 years as a result of the pope's decision."

Tories cry foul over crime bills, again

- Justice minister says opposition stalling legislation
- 'And it's completely untrue,' says Liberal justice critic

The Conservative government is once again putting politics ahead of public policy when it comes to criminal justice, Opposition critics charged yesterday.

As a six-week break nears, Justice Minister Rob Nicholson and Public Safety Minister Vic Toews are complaining of Liberal stalling on justice bills. It's a familiar drumbeat of the Harper government that comes at the end of every parliamentary session.

"If anyone is holding up the government's agenda on criminal justice it is the government itself," said Liberal justice critic Marlene Jennings.

Nicholson doesn't see it that way. "We're doing our best to move them," he said yesterday, rattling off a list of bills he says have been delayed by the opposition.

But for every bill he cites, there's another that languishes because the government doesn't push it forward after its high-profile introduction, such as an October 2009 bill in response to a Surpreme Court ruling: "Police and probation officers need to regain the ability to collect breath and other samples from offenders who are under court order to abstain from consuming drugs and alcohol," Nicholson said at the time. The legislation died when Harper prorogued Parliament last December. It wasn't reintroduced until May 31 and has been left for dead by the government ever since. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada, EU talk trade

A controversial NAFTA provision that allows corporations to seek compensation from governments is likely to be included in any eventual free-trade deal with Europe, say sources close to the negotiations.

Representatives from Canada and Europe are scheduled to meet in Ottawa this week to prepare for the next round of negotiations aimed at finalizing a wide-reaching economic and trade agreement by the end of 2011.

12 Ottawa predicts the Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement with Europe will boost the country's GDP by $12 billion annually.

It's all about the PlayBook

RIM's base grows in N. America due to promotions by Verizon and AT&T

For Research In Motion, the future is all about PlayBook, the BlackBerry maker's answer to Apple's iPad, and whether it can help rejuvenate the smartphone company.

Research In Motion is expected to report strong results on Thursday, driven by international growth and improved sales in the North American market.

But, inevitably, the launch of the PlayBook early next year will be intrinsic to RIM's success in the new year and will be front and centre in any predictions made about its prospects.

"If they can lever the tablet to get back into the high end of the smartphone business, then the numbers are going to go up," telecom analyst Matthew Robison said.

The PlayBook is aimed at business users and will be used tethered to a BlackBerry, providing the same level of security for information on the tablet. RIM is also expected to debut a brand new operating system for its tablet that will be used in future smartphones.

"It has the potent of really invigorating the market for RIM products," said Robison of Wunderlich Securities Inc. in San Francisco.

GETTY IMAGES/JUSTIN SULLIVAN

▶ RIM's Mike Lazaridis.

If the PlayBook performs in the field as well as the demos and paper specifications suggest, then it will be a strong multimedia device that will also attract a lot of consumer interest, Robison said.

He said if RIM doesn't execute on the PlayBook, the company will likely at least hold its own and grow moderately in the coming years.

Analysts expect the new BlackBerry Torch, which has both a touchscreen and slideout keyboard, will have helped to increase North American sales.

Urban Compass

STEVE COLLINS

There was some (mostly) good-natured griping among city hall reporters at last week's inaugural meeting of the new council, and no wonder: It started on time, was over in an hour and a half, and the period in between was characterized by minimal pointless bickering around the council table.

Gone was the drama of the O'Brien era, as the media soberly faced the prospect of having to cover a functional council and maybe even (horrors!) the issues. What's bad for the local scribes might work out pretty well for Ottawa.

Of course, it's still early days, and much of the business before council was numbing procedural stuff hardly worth arguing over.

There was a spark of the old magic, however, when Capital Coun. David Chernushenko piped up during a discussion of reimbursing members of city advisory committees for mileage racked up driving to meetings, as city staff already are.

"To pay people to drive to meetings, (Coun. David Chernushenko) said, was 'perverse.'"

He pointed out that Ottawa's official plan prioritizes healthier, less wasteful and more environmentally sustainable active transit like walking and cycling, and public transit, over the private car. To pay people to drive to meetings, he said, was "perverse," and perhaps the city could come up with some kind of mileage formula to reimburse walkers and cyclists.

That was enough for Cumberland Coun. Stephen Blais, who pronounced the idea of paying people to walk or bike "ridiculous."

Blais' point is taken. What recoupable expenses are incurred by walking and biking? Sneaker depreciation? Power bars?

Still, the embarrassing fact remains that we as a city are, with mileage allowances, encouraging people to use the most expensive, least sustainable mode of transport only because it's the most expensive and least sustainable. It's the way it's always been done, but perverse is still the word for it. There also seems to be something about the humble bicycle that touches off weird political culture wars that so often shove substantive debate off the stage.

In his turn as court jester for Toronto Mayor Rob Ford last week, Don Cherry bizarrely singled out "all the pinkos out there that ride bicycles" as enemies of the new populist regime.

We can be thankful the rhetoric is a little cooler here for now, and even if Chernushenko's scheme to pay cyclists and walkers is a non-starter, maybe we could contemplate eliminating mileage allowances entirely and letting city workers pay for their own drive — or walk — to work.

Extreme-sized creatures

Worth mentioning

Fossils of a giant stork have been discovered on a far-flung Indonesian island that has been home to many extreme-sized creatures — from tiny human-like "hobbits" and dwarf elephants to the world's largest-known rats and lizards.

Authors Hanneke Meijer and Rokus Due wrote in the December issue of the Zoological Journal of the Linnean Society that leg bones from the marabou stork, which lived 20,000 to 50,000 years ago, indicate it stood around six feet tall and weighed up to 35 pounds.

The bones were found during excavations of the Liang Bua cave in the west of the island of Flores at a depth of around 15 feet.

Flores, located on Indonesia's eastern edge, has never been connected to another island or mainland, shaping evolution of historic wildlife, with many small-sized warm blooded animals growing larger than elsewhere on the planet, and big-sized mammals becoming more diminutive, said Colin Groves, a professor at Australian National University who was not related to the study, citing the so-called "island rule" in biology.

With no mammalian carnivores, birds and reptiles faced less competition for food, accounting for some of their massive size. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Metro Minute at museum of civilization

Now is the time to check out the latest acquisitions at the Canadian Museum of Civilization and get a peek into Canada's 350-year history of formal education. The museum recently received two centuries' worth of classroom treasures from the Ottawa Catholic School Board, including 1,800 books and 500 artifacts. Visitors can browse through workbooks, writing instruments, inkwells, maps, and other items, which represent the teaching methods and classroom etiquette of Canada's past. The Toles School module depicts a one-room schoolhouse in rural Alberta and describes the history of a group of African Americans who immigrated to Western Canada just before the First World War. ● JOE LOFARO

Portrait of a prince with his 'princess'

- William and Kate pose for official photos to celebrate engagement
- Same photographer took photos of Diana just before she died

Prince William and Kate Middleton look relaxed, poised and very much in love in official photos released to mark their engagement.

One of the two images by Mario Testino shows the couple, dressed in jeans and casual tops, smiling in each others' arms. The other, more formal, depicts them standing together in a state room at St. James's Palace.

The pictures, released yesterday by the prince's office, were taken by fashion photographer Testino, a royal family favourite who captured some of the most iconic images of William's late mother, Princess Diana.

Testino said the couple appeared "in their prime and brimming with happiness" when he photographed them on Nov. 25.

"I have never felt so much joy as when I see them together," he said.

The Peruvian photographer, who made his name shooting models like Kate Moss, took a series of glamorous black-and-white images of Diana that were published in Vanity Fair in 1997, shortly before her death in a Paris car crash.

William, who is second in line to the British throne, has inherited his mother's poise. In both pictures he and Middleton appear entirely comfortable with the camera and each other.

William and Middleton, both 28, announced last month that they will marry on April 29 at Westminster Abbey in London.

Testino has often photographed members of the royal family, taking portraits to mark Prince William's 21st birthday in 2003 and his younger brother Prince Harry's 20th birthday the next year. He also has photographed their father, Prince Charles, for Vogue magazine.

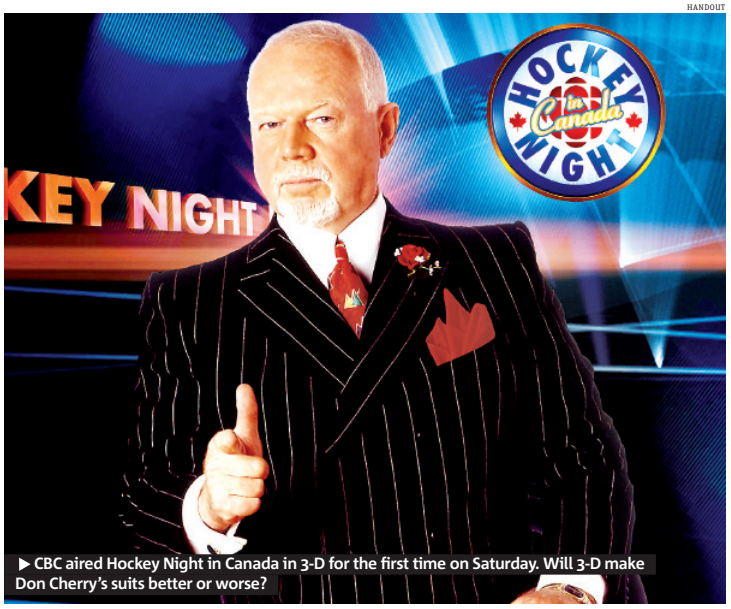
HANDOUT



▶ CBC aired Hockey Night in Canada in 3-D for the first time on Saturday. Will 3-D make Don Cherry's suits better or worse?

CBC's 3-D hockey still has some kinks to iron out

◗ Too much hype for new technology ◗ Cameras did not always offer the best angles to watch game action

Saturday marked CBC's first foray into 3-D for Hockey Night In Canada — and unfortunately, it showed.

The Canadian Press reviewed the game with a new 3-D TV on loan from Panasonic, the sponsor of the inaugural 3-D hockey broadcast, and after several days of watching all kinds of different content and seeing how cool 3-D can look, Hockey Night in Canada was a bit disappointing.

The broadcast had its moments and the potential for using 3-D in future games was clear, but the quality of presentation was far from perfect. And CBC's nonstop shilling for the technology made it feel like an infomercial for 3-D with hockey squeezed in.

Ron MacLean was quoted as saying he thinks 3-D will have 10 times the impact high definition did, and Kelly Hrudey kicked off the show by saying, "It is the wave of the future; it's not a gimmick."

It would be one thing if the breathless gushing about the technology stopped when the puck dropped but it went on all night long, even while play was on.

And it was a bit comical to see the on-air talent keep their glasses on for the entire broadcast as if to say to the audience, "We know you're stuck wearing them so we will too."

Hopefully by the time CBC's next 3-D broadcast rolls around — on Feb. 20, when the Calgary Flames host the Montreal Canadiens for the outdoor Heritage Classic from McMahon Stadium — they'll just let the technology speak for itself.

Hockey fans thinking they might want to get in on the next 3-D game should know what to expect. Watching a game in 3-D isn't about sensing that pucks are coming through the screen — although you might get that feeling if a puck were to be shot straight at the camera. The real experience is the enhanced sense of depth that makes it feel like you can see deep into the screen, like looking out a window, or actually sitting in the stands at the arena.

During scrambles in front of the net there's a better sense of how players jam the outside of the crease and battle for space. The referees also had a knack for getting in the way of the shot, which actually just added to the 3-D effect. Shots from cameras positioned along the glass give an impressive view that competes with sitting rinkside. But it's not necessarily the best angle to actually follow the action — as cool as it is to see — and CBC was guilty a few times of lingering too long with angles that showed off the 3-D effect but didn't follow the play well.

For that reason, it may just be that replays are better suited to those really cool angles that maximize the 3-D effect.

CBC also had a few other nagging problems that will hopefully be addressed in future broadcasts, like distracting glare and reflections off the sideboard glass, and focus issues that made 3-D-enduced headaches feel even worse.

And while CBC did a nice job of putting its onscreen graphics in 3-D, the effect was actually too good for the game clock and scoreboard, which sat too far in the foreground and were distracting.

2030: A futuristic forecast

Twenty years ago, nobody would have imagined smartphones, Facebook or even Google. Are we better at predicting the future today? Metro asked eight-year-old Londoner Calder Christopher and futurist Chris Carbone to envision what our daily lives will look like in the future. Be sure to check back in 20 years to see how accurate their predictions were.

▶ With touch screen computers in use, stationary may look archaic in the not-so-distant future.

Transport

Christopher: Cars will fly and there will be a new way of getting around using a box you step on to that takes you places. Airplanes will be able to go into outer space.
Carbone: People will link their cars to rapid transit systems, where cars travel together at an automated speed.

Jobs

Christopher: Spaceships will fly people to outer space where they work. Aliens will smell new food to see if they're edible for humans.
Carbone: Jobs will exist in nano- and neurotechnology, areas that study how the brain interacts with computer devices and pharmaceuticals.

Communications

Christopher: There will be a phone that shows the person's face when someone wants to chat with them.
Carbone: Whoever you want to talk to will be instantly available. Youngsters will want to be always connected to their network, primarily using smartphones.

Housing

Christopher: People will live in buildings that look like big temples — one section of the temple for each family.
Carbone: People will still live in the types of houses you see today, but they'll use less electricity and water. Every home will harvest its own energy as well.

Schools

Christopher: Schools will look the same on the outside as today, but there will be more stuff inside the buildings. Everyone will have an iPad. It will be cool!
Carbone: Children will have a personalized digital learning record that will follow them throughout their education.

Best innovations

Christopher: There will be a gadget that you'll tell, "clean my room" and he'll do it. Police will have robots that catch bad guys.
Carbone: Biometrics will be used as payment. You'll just to go a machine that will scan your retina or fingerprint. Cash machines will become obsolete.

Author celebrates Canadian cuisine

Feasting and Fasting gives readers a taste of what our ancestors' ate and drank Stories and recipes show how special occasions were observed

The importance of celebrations throughout Canada's history was marked Monday night when Dorothy Duncan, author of several books on the country's culinary heritage, was honoured.

The event at Toronto's Fort York National Historic Site was held to launch the culinary historian's latest book, Feasting and Fasting: Canada's Heritage Celebrations.

The book is an introduction to the foods and beverages that were a central part of our ancestors' celebrations.

It begins with the new year and takes readers through each calendar month.

There are stories and recipes for everything from Chinese New Year to Lent and the significance of maple syrup as the harbinger of spring.

Duncan traces the country's culinary heritage back to the 18th century when people marked Christmas, or another type of celebration, that brought family and friends together.

"Hopefully this book will make readers think about their own traditions, their own family and the things that are and were important to them."
DOROTHY DUNCAN, AUTHOR

"The setting aside of time and the gifts of food made out of love with their own hands was paramount to our ancestors, some of whom had come from far away to colonize Canada," she said in an interview ahead of the launch.

Duncan found in her research, for example, that it was common for weddings to be held to coincide with the festive season.

"Nowadays we focus on June weddings, but in the early days, many were performed at Christmas because the families would all be gathered together," she says. "It was a convenient time to have them all around you."

Duncan, who worked as a culinary historian for Black Creek Pioneer Village in Toronto as well as the Toronto Historical Board, has spent many years collecting data for the book.

She is dedicated to working with organizations across Canada and around the world to ensure that this country's culinary history is recognized, researched and recorded.

Duncan always asks people how they are going to celebrate a special occasion and what they are going to have on the table.

"They always talk about the things of the past such as, 'We are going to have the pudding my Aunt Sarah made' or, 'We are going to have the turkey stuffed just like my grandmother did,'" Duncan says.

"Most important, however, is that these days with most people 'eating on the fly' we take a great deal more care during days of celebration because we remember how important they are and it touches both our hearts and minds," she adds.

Duncan also wrote Canadians at Table, which garnered a culinary book Gold Award in 2007 from Cuisine Canada and the University of Guelph.

In 2003, Dundurn Press released her book, Nothing More Comforting.

NOT ALL TOILET PAPER IS CREATED EQUAL

Question: I found two brands of what claimed to be 100 per cent recycled toilet paper. One was much more expensive than the bigger name brand. Are all recycled paper products considered equal? Sacha, Vancouver

You're correct in suspecting that not all recycled paper products — from toilet paper to office paper — are created equal. To make sense of paper labels, you should choose paper products that leave the most trees in the forest.

When a claim reads "100 per cent recycled," the recycled content can come from one of two sources. The best choice is toilet and other paper products made from 100 per cent post-consumer waste (PCW) because it is made from resources that have already been extracted, reused and kept out of the waste stream.

PCW refers to paper made from the flyers or envelopes that you've recycled. The PCW content in paper products will vary from 10 to 100 per cent. Choose the highest!

The less desirable choice is made from pre-consumer waste, or the scraps left over after paper processing — trim from newspapers or printing overruns. But it's still a better choice than paper made from virgin pulp.

Recycling water in space

Every drop of water aboard the International Space Station is precious So astronauts go to the extreme They drink recycled water from urine

Don Pettit doesn't mind drinking his own urine — or his sweat, for that matter. Pettit is far from insane. As an astronaut, he has no choice but to drink all available fluids.

"You make water inside your body, through your breath and your sweat," explains Pettit, a veteran NASA astronaut who has lived on the International Space Station for six months. "On the ISS you capture all of that water and recycle it."

Astronauts are each allowed only 3.5 litres of water per day — for hygiene and food combined. They wash themselves using wet wipes, and so they consume 92 per cent less water on hygiene than Earth-dwellers.

Recently the ISS cut its need for water supplies by 65 per cent after installing a state-of-the-art water-recycling machine. "It captures your breath, sweat and water from damp cloths and turns it into water," says Pettit.

There's also a urine processor, which turns 80 per cent of urine into drinkable water. "You can dehydrate your breakfast and make your coffee with water from the processor," says Pettit.

Earth-dwellers may follow suit. One study shows that 75 to 85 per cent of people in Western European countries would consider using urine-diversion toilets, which allow urine to be recycled.

Radical water reuse may be more palatable than it sounds, as Pettit insists: "Recycled urine tastes like bottled water." METRO

LIFE IS SWEET FOR THIS CHOCOLATIER

PARNJIT PARMAR/MONTANA RIDGE ENT.

▶ Ingrid Laederach Steven at Swiss Master Chocolatier.

The beautiful little chocolate shop is tucked into a strip mall in one of Toronto's most exclusive neighbourhoods.

On the front door is a sign that reads, "I believe … that you can keep going long after you think you can't."

The author of the quote is unknown, but it is the mantra of the owner, a woman as beautiful as the tasty chocolates she has sold for the past 25years.

When you first meet Ingrid Laederach Steven you would never know the traumatic turning points that have shaped her life. As a teen, her dream of becoming a professional singer was dashed when she damaged her vocal cords. She suffered a life threatening heart attack on an airplane and went through seven miscarriages while trying to start a family.

"I kept persevering," Ingrid says, "I kept telling myself, It's going to happen, it's going to happen."

These were dark moments for Ingrid but she knew that life would get better. Then she opened up Swiss Master Chocolatier in Toronto. Hollywood celebrities, presidents, royalty, a pope and even astronauts have all nibbled her amazing truffles and treats.

As you read Ingrid's story, the "I Believe" sign on her front door takes on a new meaning.

Remember the seven miscarriages? Ingrid finally gave birth to two beautiful daughters, and now she has four grandchildren to spoil and love. "Every day I realize I'm lucky. So lucky," she says.

But for us looking in on Ingrid's life we realize we're the lucky ones. She's shown us that not all turning points in life are happy ones, but with a little dose of optimism, hope — and a few chocolates — we can all Believe.

Dark chocolate is good for you

Dark chocolate contains antioxidants that can fight cancer and heart disease, and tryptophan, making it a natural antidepressant.

Georgetown University researchers found when breast cancer cells were treated with chocolate flavonols, the cells stopped dividing.

The University of Nottingham found flavonol-rich cocoa increases blood flow to the brain which could combat dementia and Alzheimer's.

$7B People spend more than $7 billion a year on chocolate.

Knowledge is tasty

- The first people to make chocolate were the ancient tribes of Mexico and Central America.
- The first chocolate bar was created in 1842 by Cadbury.
- The average person will consume 10,000 chocolate bars in a lifetime.
- The Swiss consume more chocolate per capita than any other nation.

Youth left behind in economic recovery

Jobless rate among young people a litmus test of job market strength Analysts say Canada has a long way to go

Canada's falling unemployment rate is hiding an unpleasant truth — tens of thousands are leaving the labour market in frustration, and none more so than young workers.

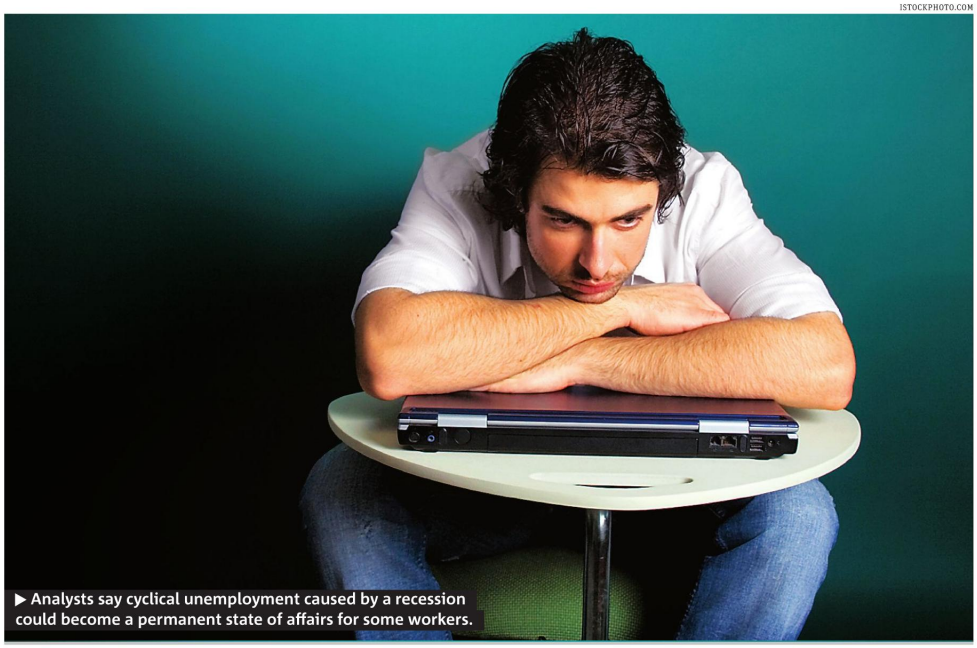
Last week's labour force survey for November presented a distorted hall-of-mirrors picture of employment — with the jobless rate falling to a two-year low of 7.6 per cent on the strength of little job creation.

For young workers in the 15- to 24-year-old category, the picture was even more distorted. The unemployment rate plummeted from 15 per cent to 13.6 per cent with virtually no new jobs added.

The mathematical disconnect comes about because Statistics Canada does not measure the number of workers against those who want jobs, but against those who are actively seeking work. There have been fewer of those.

Young people are leaving the labour force in droves. According to the agency, the youth participation rate is the lowest in over a decade.

ISTOCKPHOTO.COM



▶ Analysts say cyclical unemployment caused by a recession could become a permanent state of affairs for some workers.

What's more, while the economy has created over 440,000 jobs since the recession, there are 228,000 fewer young people employed.

Statistics Canada cannot say for certain why more young people have been leaving the workforce, although analyst Lahouaria Yssaad notes that since the numbers are not as stark in the over 20 to 24 age subcategory, many in the youngest cohort may have gone back to school.

What is obvious, however, is that young people were disproportionately left behind during the recession, and one year removed from the official start of the recovery, they are still having a difficult time re-connecting with the economy.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bulge of boomers

As governments consider raising the retirement age, young people can't break into the market because older workers are tying up jobs, according to Canadian Auto Workers economist Jim Stanford.

- Ironically, Canadians 55 and older have done the best since the recession and are the only age group that has seen the participation rate rise in the past year.
- "You have a big bulge of baby boomers who have gotten into established positions, entitled to three and four weeks vacation, and young people can't find jobs," says Brian Bethune, of ISH Global Insight.

9.1% Stanford's analysis suggests if the lower participation among youth workers and those in the 25 to 54 age category are taken into account, the jobless rate would be 9.1 per cent, 1.5 per cent higher than the official rate.

DJs decking the airwaves with holiday carols

It's not quite 8 a.m. but Erin Davis and Mike Cooper have already been awake for four hours.

Inside the CHFI-FM studio the chipper morning crew of Toronto's all-Christmas music station prepares to play today's "Feel Good Favourite" song request.

Usually it's an up-tempo, happy tune for people to bop along to on the way to work, but Christmas brings out more sentimentality.

A few days earlier, a mother called the station to say her teenage son was battling cancer and getting his last radiation treatment that day.

She requested his favourite Christmas song, Bing Crosby's Mele Kalikimaka, as "a big happy hug to my son for crossing the finish line."

On this day, another mother has requested Jingle Bell Rock so her two-year-old daughter can get down with the beat.

The station has been playing nothing but Christmas music since Nov. 21. And the hosts love it.

Besides a couple of stray Santa hats and a wreath on the wall the studio doesn't look particularly festive.

The hosts, however, are wearing bright, Santa-red shirts. Davis sports some funky boots and a pair of jingle bell earrings.

Producer Ian MacArthur says they sound like wind chimes.

"I've heard that little clinking all day and I thought somebody had glasses," says Cooper.

As Amy Grant croons It's The Most Wonderful Time of the Year, Davis sings some mangled lyrics off-air: "It's the most wonderful time for a beer."

University of Guelph researcher studying astronauts' feet Project aimed at helping elderly keep balance

Canada's last space research project on the U.S. Space Shuttle has a down-to-earth goal: to delve into the role our feet play in keeping our balance as we age.

Known as Hypersole, the experiment began when Dr. Leah Bent of the University of Guelph learned that some astronauts experience tingling in their feet.

"On Earth, our skin sensitivity decreases as we age. One of the interesting things about the skin during space travel is that we see changes in the opposite direction: skin sensitivity may actually increase," she explains.

Funded by the Canadian Space Agency, Hypersole will help scientists better understand how the decline in skin sensitivity in our feet leads to a loss of balance — and consequently, a greater number of falls — in the elderly.

Bent will use tiny nylon filaments and a vibration device to put astronauts to the ultimate "tickle test" to see which parts of their feet become more sensitive before and after spaceflight, and how that might affect their balance.

Three astronauts have already participated in the experiment. Bent and her team will test six more before and after the last flights of the Space Shuttle in November 2010 and winter 2011.

In addition to the aging population, Hypersole could help astronauts by providing more information on how they maintain their balance while living and working in space.

Will Calderon be ready to play?

Raptors guard to test injured foot at practice after missing two games

Today's practice at the Air Canada Centre might be one of the most anticipated Raptors practices of the season.

The team expects injured point guard Jose Calderon to take part in the full workout and see how his sore left foot holds up.

Calderon has missed Toronto's last two games — a loss to Denver Friday and Saturday's miracle comeback against the Detroit Pistons — and he hopes to be able to play tomorrow when the Raptors are in Charlotte.

However, the six-year veteran, who stayed home to get treatment on his foot while his teammates were in Detroit, can't be sure of how the foot will respond to a full workout until after today.

Calderon has been on a tear since taking over the full-time starter's job after the Nov. 20 trade of Jarrett Jack to the New Orleans Hornets.

In the nine games since, he averaged 11.8 points and 7.9 assists per game while shooting 54 per cent from the field.

Most importantly, he averaged fewer than two turnovers per game and with the Raptors coming off an 18-turnover effort in Detroit, his ball-handling and offence-running skills are in need.

His replacement, Jerryd Bayless, tied his career high with 31 points Saturday in Detroit but committed four turnovers while dishing out seven assists.

Leandro Barbosa, who has assumed backup point guard duties with Calderon out, had two turnovers against Detroit and four in Friday's loss to Denver.

Julian Wright has turned in two solid outings in a row and has proven himself to be a valuable player in certain circumstances.

The six-foot-eight forward has spent long parts of the season buried deep on the bench but he provided 17 minutes of excellent defence — including four steals — in Saturday's come-from-behind win in Detroit.

His defence was also a big part of a late comeback that fell short Friday against Denver.

Peja still out

Peja Stojakovic remains in injury limbo with the Raptors.

- The veteran forward, obtained from New Orleans Nov. 20, has missed Toronto's last eight games because of swelling in his left knee and there is no timetable for his return.

Lowly Lions finally beat a division rival

The Green Bay Packers couldn't find the end zone without Aaron Rodgers' arm to carry them.

The Lions knocked Rodgers out of the game and snapped a trio of dubious streaks in a 7-3 win Sunday. Drew Stanton threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to tight end Will Heller midway through the fourth quarter and Detroit held on.

LIONS	PACKERS
7	3

Rodgers started his 45th straight game in the regular season since replacing Brett Favre in 2008, but that streak might be in jeopardy because of his second concussion this season.

The Lions (3-10) snapped a five-game losing streak overall, a 10-game slide against Green Bay and a 19-game skid against the NFC North in what was the NFL's worst slump within a division since the merger four decades ago.

Detroit's last division win was Oct. 28, 2007, at Chicago.

Patriots 36, Bears 7

Tom Brady threw for 369 yards and two touchdowns, and the New England Patriots locked up their eighth playoff berth in 10 years with a pounding of the Chicago Bears on a snowy, blustery, bone-chilling Sunday.

The win was the fifth straight for the Patriots (11-2).

Bills 13, Browns 6

Ryan Fitzpatrick threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to David Nelson and Leodis McKelvin made a late interception for Buffalo. Rian Lindell hit field goals of 30 and 19 yards to help the Bills (3-11) snap a three-game losing streak against Cleveland. The Browns (5-8) were eliminated from playoff contention.

NFL under the weather

Snow, wind, ice and rain took their toll on the league, with one game moved and attendance down

▶ Snow falls onto the field from a hole in the collapsed roof of the Metrodome in Minneapolis.

Snow problem

How yesterday's weather impacted the NFL:

- The New York Giants' game at Minnesota was postponed from yesterday to tonight and moved to Detroit, after a blizzard hit the Twin Cities, causing the Metrodome roof to collapse for the fourth time, but the first time since 1983.
- New England's game at Chicago's Soldier Field was threatened by whiteout conditions and the field constantly needed shovelling.
- Rain up and down the Eastern seaboard hurt attendance in Jacksonville, Landover, Md., and Orchard Park, N.Y., for early games.
- Ralph Wilson Stadium in Orchard Park was about one-third full for the kickoff of the Bills and Browns.
- The Buccaneers-Redskins game also was played before lots of empty seats, as were Raiders-Jaguars in Jacksonville, and Falcons-Panthers in Charlotte, N.C.
- At the New Jersey Meadowlands, the wet stuff wasn't frozen, but heavy rain poured down in the second quarter, just as Santonio Holmes was dropping a sure touchdown pass.

St-Pierre running out of challengers

Georges St-Pierre has defended his UFC welterweight title five times, won his last eight fights and not lost a round in his last seven bouts.

He is close to cleaning out the 170-pound division in the UFC, leaving a line of top contenders in his wake.

On Saturday night at UFC 124, the 29-year-old from Montreal added to his legacy by defeating Josh Koscheck for a second time, laying a comprehensive five-round beating on the brash American before a record North American mixed martial arts crowd of 23,152 at the Bell Centre.

Just as he did to Koscheck's training partner Jon Fitch at UFC 87, he sent Koscheck home with a battered face and a broken dream.

"He picked Josh Koscheck apart," said UFC president Dana White.

"I thought he fought a beautiful fight against a guy who I have a lot of respect for," he added.

But St-Pierre's biggest accomplishment at UFC 124 may have been to truly put mixed martial arts on the map in Canada.

Saturday's card, the UFC's fifth in Canada, drew unprecedented attention from domestic mainstream media. The storyline of the classy champion and the trash-talking American attracted a lot of new eyes to the sport, as did White's calculating insistence that GSP was more famous worldwide than Wayne Gretzky or any other Canadian athlete ever.

RYAN REMIORZ/THE CANADIAN PRESS

And UFC 124 set the stage for the UFC's foray into Toronto — set for April 30 at the Rogers Centre. St-Pierre said he's up for fighting there, if needed by the UFC.

"My game doesn't rely on chance. I don't gamble when I fight. I try to put all the odds on my side."
GEORGES ST-PIERRE

Jake Shields is next up for St-Pierre. After that, there's a Help Wanted sign for welterweight contenders.

A super-fight with middleweight champion Anderson Silva is a possibility, although White offered little on that.

"I truly believe that my job is to give people the fight that they want to see, the fight they want to pay for. We'll see what happens."

Such a fight would have long-lasting ramifications.

St-Pierre says he would have to manage the weight gain in moving to a 185-pound weight class from 170. And he says if he makes the move, it will be permanent so his body does not have to endure yo-yo weight changes.

St-Pierre currently walks around at 189 to 190 pounds, cutting to 170 to fight. To move up to middleweight, he reckons he needs to increase his weight to at least 200.

Extension key for Anthony

Nuggets star wants a deal before collective agreement expires in summer

Carmelo Anthony wants his money, even if he's not saying where he wants it.

Anthony made clear yesterday the importance of a contract extension, which he's thus far refused to sign with the Denver Nuggets. He also said he doesn't think the Nuggets would trade him somewhere he wouldn't accept one.

Still undecided

- There have been reports since the summer that Carmello Anthony's preference was to play in New York, where he was born, lived his first eight years and was married this summer.
- But he said after the Nuggets' practice Saturday that he hadn't made up his mind.

After the Nuggets' 129-125 loss to the Knicks, the team Anthony reportedly wants to play for, he was asked the importance of getting an extension before the collective bargaining agreement expires next summer. The NBA wants major salary cuts in the next deal.

"Whatever decision that I make, that's going to be the first thing that gets done," Anthony said.

ESPN.com reported later yesterday that Anthony would only accept a long-term extension if it came with a trade to the Knicks.

Drogba's goal gives Chelsea tie

Didier Drogba came off the bench yesterday to earn Chelsea a 1-1 draw at Tottenham, although the striker wasted a chance to clinch his team's first Premier League win for a month when he missed an injury-time penalty.

Roman Pavlyuchenko had put the home side ahead in the 15th minute but Drogba, who entered the game at halftime, equalized midway through the second half when he latched onto a ball in the area and smashed a shot at goalkeeper Heurelho Gomes, who fumbled it over the line.

In the second minute of added time, Gomes then barged Ramires over in the area following a flick on by Drogba.

Instead of putting the resulting penalty to the goalkeeper's right — as he had done for his four previous kicks — Drogba hit it the other way and Gomes made a comfortable save to stretch Chelsea's run without a win to five league matches.

Chelsea still moved level on points with third-place Manchester United, but United can leapfrog Manchester City and provisional leader Arsenal if it beats the Gunners today.

"We fully deserved to win the game," Chelsea captain John Terry said. "We dominated them. That's more like the Chelsea we all know."

But Chelsea has now lost three and drawn two of its last five matches at White Hart Lane.

Also yesterday, Stuart Holden scored with two minutes left to help Bolton overcome its fourth red card of the season and beat Blackburn 2-1. Stephen Hunt scored to give Wolverhampton Wanderers a 1-0 win over Birmingham that aids its attempt to avoid relegation.

AC Milan looks strong atop Serie A

Kevin Prince Boateng and Robinho scored first-half goals as AC Milan beat Bologna 3-0 yesterday in a convincing performance by the Serie A leaders.

Zlatan Ibrahimovic scored a third goal after halftime and Milan goalkeeper Christian Abbiati denied the hosts a consolation goal when he saved Marco Di Vaio's penalty kick 12 minutes from time.

The win is Milan's 11th of the season and takes its point tally at the top of the standings to 36.

Juventus beat Lazio 2-1 and moves over the Rome side into second place after Milos Krasic hit an injury-time winner.

Lazio slips to fourth, level with Juventus and Napoli on 30 points, but behind on goal difference.

Giorgio Chiellini gave Juventus the lead in the second minute with a header from Alberto Aquilani's corner.

Lazio equalized in the 14th after Juventus failed to clear a corner and Mauro Zarate slotted the loose ball home.

Aquilani hit a low shot that Lazio goalkeeper Fernando Muslera held shortly after halftime and in injury time the Uruguayan pushed Alessandro Del Piero's freekick away for a corner.

Krasic then raced down the right wing and chipped the ball over Muslera to give Juventus the win.

"We are having a good season and today was a great result, not only because we've gone above Lazio and Napoli, but because Lazio is an excellent team," Juventus captain Chiellini said.

AS Roma's inconsistent season continued with an unconvincing 1-0 win at home to Bari.

Roma captain Francesco Totti set up Juan for the only goal of the game.

Offer is transferable to a family member living within the same household (proof of address required). As part of the transaction, dealer may request documentation and contact GM to verify eligibility. This offer may not be redeemed for cash and may not be combined with certain other consumer incentives, including the First to Cruze program. See your GM dealer for details. GM reserves the right to amend or terminate offers for any reason in whole or in part at any time without prior notice. ▼▼To qualify for GMCL's Cash For Clunkers incentive, you must: (1) receive Government confirmation of vehicle eligibility under the Retire Your Ride ("RYR") Program, supported by The Government of Canada, and turn in a 1995 or older MY vehicle that is in running condition and has been registered and properly insured in your name for the last 6 months (12 months in B.C.); (2) turn in a 1995 or older MY vehicle that is in running condition and has been registered and properly insured under (i) a small business name for the last 6 months or (ii) your name for the last 6 months in B.C.; or (3) turn in a 1996 through 2003 MY vehicle that is in running condition and has been registered and properly insured in your name for the last 6 months. GMCL will provide eligible consumers with a manufacturer to consumer incentive (tax inclusive) to be used towards the purchase/finance/lease of a new eligible 2010 or 2011 MY Buick/Chevrolet/GMC/Cadillac vehicle delivered between October 1 and December 31, 2010. Ineligible vehicles: Chevrolet Aveo, 2010 MY Chevrolet Cobalt, 2011 MY Buick Regal, Chevrolet Cruze and Cadillac CTS Coupe, and Medium Duty trucks. Incentive ranges from $750 to $3,000, depending on model purchased. Incentive may not be combined with certain other offers. By participating in the Cash For Clunkers program you will not be eligible for any trade-in value for your vehicle. See your participating GM dealer for additional program conditions and details. GMCL may modify, extend or terminate program in whole or in part at any time without notice. If you successfully complete the RYR Program, you will be eligible for a $300 cash incentive from the Canadian Government. Residents of Northwest Territories, Yukon or Nunavut are excluded from the RYR Program and are therefore ineligible for GMCL's Cash For Clunkers incentive. Some conditions apply. Visit www.retireyourride.ca (www.scrapit.ca for residents of B.C.) for more information.

Today's horoscope

Aries March 21-April 20 If there is something of a creative nature that needs to be finished you had better get on with it quickly. Be confident. Be adventurous. Take risks.

Taurus April 21-May 21 You must get tough and let certain people know that the free ride is over. You have done more than enough for them, now they must do something for you.

Gemini May 22-June 21 Don't listen to those who say you should play safe. There may be an element of danger involved in what you are planning but what fun would life be if everything was a sure thing? Risk is what keeps you looking so young.

Cancer June 22-July 22 Follow your instincts today, no matter how illogical they may seem, you might just land yourself a winner. You've been too timid of late and it's time to take a few chances.

Leo July 23-Aug.23 You may be finding it hard to put your thoughts into words but your communication skills will improve over the next few days. Make sure you know what's happening on the work front.

Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 Something you have been struggling with for quite some time will come easier today, making you glad you did not give up on it when the going was tough. Better days are coming.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 If you need inspiration as the week begins you are more likely to get it from other people than from inside your own head. Listen carefully to what friends and work colleagues have to tell you.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Others will say nice things about you today, which in turn will boost your confidence and make you determined to do well, both for them and for yourself.

Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 There is no point feeling sorry for yourself just because a few things have gone wrong. Each day is a new beginning, remind yourself of that fact often today.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 You are worrying about a mistake you made in the distant past. Why? What's done is done and cannot be undone. Live in the now.

Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 There may be a certain tension in the air as the new week begins but don't let it worry you. Others are well aware how much they depend on you so a parting of the ways is unlikely.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 You seem reluctant to give up a viewpoint that has gone out of fashion. Do you know something that no one else does, or are you too stubborn to change with the times? Whatever the reason give it some thought today. SALLY BROMPTON
